HOW A JAPANESE NEWSPAPER IS PRODUCED.

When a paper has been suspended the first intimation the public has of the fact is the quiet in the composing-room. Few places in the world where regular business is carried on are noisier than a Japanese.

composing-room. The amount of noise therein is determined only by the cubic each yelling at the top of his voice. There seems neither head nor tail to this confusion, but, nevertheless, each of these screech-intently while he parades about. This object is a 'line' or stick of Japanese characters, for which he must find the ap-to find all these, for to print even a four-page paper in Japan upward of five thousand different characters are used. These require many fonts, which are crowded into a small space, that there may be as little traveling as possible. The 'devil' goes about these fonts with waltzing motion, there are so many corners to turn, and always with his eyes fixed on his stick, as the it were cancerac.

windows, which reach from foor to reiling, going on, and that the devotees were wrought well as to the frenzy point.

A late of cities with what looks at first glacion.

When he lies collected the types for all the characters on his slip he gives them to the head compositor, a learned man with goggles, who puts in the particles and the connecting words and hands the completed form to a pair of proof-readers, one of whom sings them to the other. As soon as the proof is ready, the paper is made up, all hind side before it would seem to a perpentage. The reading lines are perpenstudent who is studying abroad will send a letter, but not one of the 640 papers and periodicals now published in the Empire maintains a regular correspondent any-where, not even in the large Japanese fake as it is in any of our issues of the 'new journalism,' but it is the leaders, after all, that make one wonder why the paper is published. With the sharp red pencil of the censor pointing at him, ready to be thrust into him behind his back at any moment, the editor has evolved into a man skilled in the act of saying nothing, or, at least, what reads like nothing to the
